Recently I have watched a film called "Anne from Green Gables". It is set in 1896 in an American village and tells a story of a young girl called Anne. She helps her village overcome hard times.

The film carries an interesting message, showing how one person, no matter the age can majorly change the world around them. It gives us a new perspective on a familiar tale about a hero who saves the day, showing how even a person who seems unimportant to the community can influence it largely and reinforces the idea that everybody can be a hero of their own.

Personally I have been quite affected by the film. It changed my attitude towards simple details, that I previously deemed unimportant and it told me that community is one of the most significant things that we have in our lives. It helped me grow and evolve as a person and made me care more about the others. I have also heard that allegedly the actress that plays Anne resembles the girl greatly and it brings me joy. Knowing that such kind people like Anne actually exist in the real world.

Overall, it is a great film with an incredible message that I would recommend to everyone I know.
