Here I am about to present the film appropriate for the criteria of the said series of articles and its impact on the change of attitude of possible group of individuals and me in the first place. The second "14" is a sports film set in the Soviet Union, telling a story of an excellent hockey player Valery Kharlamov. I believe a narrative of him coming through all the difficulties and ordeals from the very bottom to the very top of hockey world with an assistance of his trainer. It is about dedication and discipline reinforced by motivation and the spirit, he came all the way from the perspective of playing in a regional team to winning the super series.

The film had a vast impact on my outlook, mostly because I am an athlete too. I evolved within me the motivation to keep going even in the hardest times. I gave the courage to stand up after an overwhelming fall. Allegedly it develops positive character not only within me, but the other people too. It challenges them to keep going and accomplishing the attainment of new heights. There is not only this film, but the majority of other ideas suggest, but the major readers' willingness and notice.

A succinct conclusion about this will be that after facing so many difficult ones, one can be discouraged, but in the end, can he tell himself to stand up and keep going? If yes - then that the mindset of a victor. Such people always reach the heights and get great, astounding results. All the real athletes shall take such things as Valery Kharlamov on their way to the top. The harder part is to stand up after a fall, just build within yourself the required condition to proceed forth.
